Parkour freerunning is a new and innovative idea for a corporate teambuilding event, which improves confidence and tests limits.

Deriving from France, parkour freerunning is a physical discipline where participants negotiate their way across urban terrain using a combination of running, jumping and climbing techniques. This sport gained serious recognition after the 2003 Channel 4 documentary 'Jump London'. It has since been featured in adverts and films such as 'Casino Royale'.

Requiring private groups of 8 or more people.
